Whitney is in a big girl bed now! Last night was the second night she slept in it. She told me today that she wants her crib back, but I don't think that's going to happen. The first night was just how I thought it would be. She got out of bed about 5 times before she finally stayed in and went to sleep. She did just great last night. It helped that she was really tired. Although, I was woken up about 4:30am to her crying and calling for me. I went in to comfort her and she was not in her bed. I looked down and her feet were sticking out from under her bed. So, I pulled her out and loved her. Not quite sure how she made it most of the way under her bed. After she calmed down, I laid her back in bed. I told her I had to go to the bathroom and I would be right back to check on her. (I really did have to go to the bathroom and that's my favorite trick to get her to lay down and not freak out because I'm leaving.) When I came back, she was asleep. Problem solved. Now she just needs to be potty trained. Any takers?
